TORTS AND CIVIL PRACTICE: SELECTED CASES FROM THE APPELLATE DIVISION, 3RD DEPARTMENT

TIMOTHY J. HIGGINS, ESQ.

DISCOVERY DISPUTE OVER SLIP-AND-FALL VIDEO

Atiles v. Golub Corp.
(McCarthy, J., 7/28/16)

Plaintiff fell in one of the defendant's stores. In discovery, her counsel sought video surveillance of the location of the fall; in response to which defendant produced footage covering the period of 24 hours before the fall through eight (8) minutes after the fall. Plaintiff's motion to compel discovery of video covering two (2) hours post-fall was denied by Supreme Court (Ferreira, J., Albany Co.), and the Third Department affirmed. The post-fall video that was disclosed showed two store employees "stooped down and proceeded to wipe the floor in the area of the accident", after which the area was opened to customer traffic. Plaintiffs' request for an adverse inference jury charge was properly denied because of the failure to show defendant "intentionally or willfully destroyed the video under obligation to preserve it".

CLAIMS AGAINST SCHOOL DISTRICTS

Kenyon v. Oneonta City School Dist.
(Rose, J., 7/21/16)

Plaintiff was visiting the defendant high school with her basketball team, and while searching for a bathroom, was hurt when a large, heavy door that had been propped up against a wall (near the girls' locker room) fell and struck her. Supreme Court (Coccoma, J., Otsego Co.) granted plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment which was supported by proof that a high school maintenance worker had taken the 50-lb. door off its hinges, left it unsecured and leaning against a vestibule wall, and failed to post warning signs or block access to the vestibule. In the absence of evidence that plaintiff bumped into the door or caused it to fall, the Third Department affirmed the order of summary judgment on liability, concluding that the removal and positioning of the door was "dangerous as a matter of law".

Elsawi v. Saratoga Springs City School Dist.
(Rose, J., 7/14/16)

The infant plaintiff was injured in the collapse of a stage riser during rehearsal for a choral concert at one of the defendant's middle schools. Plaintiff's expert engineer blamed the collapse on a defective (bent) brace bar and claimed his inspection of the riser revealed "tool marks" indicating a failed attempt to repair the equipment's locking mechanism. Supreme Court (Crowell, J., Saratoga Co.) denied the parties' motion and cross-motion for summary judgment but did find plaintiff was entitled to a jury charge on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitor (which creates a rebuttable presumption or inference that the defendant was negligent). The Appellate Division affirmed but did modify the lower court order by deleting the res ipsa jury charge as "premature, as proof related to the applicability of the doctrine has yet to be adduced at trial".

BONUS: COURT OF APPEALS SPLIT ON LATE NOTICE OF CLAIM

Wally G. v. NYC Health and Hospitals Corp.
(6/9/16)

General Municipal Law § 50-e requires that a "notice of claim" be served on a public corporation within 90 days after the claim arises. After the 90-day period, an application can be made to the court for permission to file a "late" notice of claim. The decision by the court "is purely a discretionary one" and requires consideration whether the public corporation (would-be defendant) "acquired actual knowledge of the essential facts constituting the claim" within 90 days of the incident or within a reasonable time thereafter.

Here, the infant plaintiff was born prematurely at one of the defendant's hospitals on June 15, 2005. 18 months later, without having sought court permission, the plaintiff mother served a late notice of claim alleging negligence and medical malpractice; and filed formal suit in August 2008. In December 2010, 5+ years after the infant's birth, the mother moved for permission to file the late notice of claim. Supreme Court denied the motion and granted the defendant's cross-motion to dismiss for failure to comply with GML § 50-e. A divided Appellate Division affirmed, as did the Court of Appeals (with 3 dissenters). Judge Pigott, writing for the majority, clarified the Court's 2006 analysis of the same issues in Williams v. Nassau Co. Med. Ctr. (6 NY3d 531), emphasizing that the "actual knowledge" standard cited in GML § 50-e [5] cannot be satisfied simply by establishing that the medical provider (would-be defendant) created or possessed medical records that might "suggest" that an injury occurred as a result of malpractice. Rather, the medical records "must evince that the medical staff, by its acts or omissions, inflicted an injury on plaintiff".

WELCOME TO THE PRACTICE OF LAW

MICHAEL FRIEDMAN, ESQ.

"You tell your folks back at Kirkland & Ellis that that I don't much like the idea that they think so little of this court that they didn't send a partner here to talk about this kind of problem which implicates international terrorism.... I think it's outrageous, irresponsible and insulting...Maybe Kirkland & Ellis can scrounge up a partner who isn't busy in Texas to come see a lowly judge in the Eastern District of New York...I've been a lawyer for 41 years and a judge for 16 years and I'm not having this discussion with you."

Senior United States District Judge Nicholas G. Garaufis to Associate Attorney Aulden Burcher-DuPont, September 22, 2016.

"Justice has nothing to do with what goes on in a courtroom. Justice is what comes out of a courtroom."

Clarence Darrow

Nicholas G. Garaufis has served on the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York since he was appointed by President William Clinton and confirmed by the United States Senate. He was admitted to the bar three years before I was. A few days after his dressing down of the associate, the firm appeared with a partner. Judge Garaufis then said, "Any inference that might have been achieved through the media that I was ever upset at Mr. Burcher is totally unfounded, and for that I apologize, if that's the impression that was given." No judge, that was not the impression. Rather, you made it quite clear that you believe you can dictate to a law firm who they send to represent a client. You also made it clear that you were outraged and insulted that the firm sent an associate and because you have been a lawyer for 41 years you don't have to discuss the case with the attorney who appears for a client in your courtroom. Really judge? I know it takes an Act of Congress to remove you, but do you really have to take personal umbrage with a duly admitted counsel who appears before you just because he or she is not a partner in the firm? And did you ever think what impression that leaves on the litigants when you express such displeasure with their attorneys?

Canon 3 of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges states, "A judge should be patient, dignified, respectful, and courteous to litigants, jurors, witnesses, lawyers, and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity…A judge should accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding, and that person's lawyer, the full right to be heard according to law." While judges justifiably have great power in the courtroom, one of those powers is not to dictate which attorney from a law firm of record appears for a client. When Judge Garaufis went to senior status, United States Supreme Court Judge Sonya Sotomayor said that Judge Garaufis was "dedicated, most of all, to doing the right thing as a judge and in life." She called him a mensch. Another Yiddish word comes to my mind.

When I started at the great Ainsworth, Sullivan, Tracy and Knauf doing insurance defense work in 1977, I had the opposite experience. Judges welcomed me to the practice of law, congratulated me for representing the firm and protected me from more experienced counsel. My experiences were not unique. Sure, there were the good natured jabs from my fellow attorneys. "I guess we're not settling today because they sent Friedman." But that was fine.

On my first foray into Fulton County I met the great Supreme Court Justice Carrol S. Walsh, Jr. Judge Walsh was nationally known for liberating Holocaust victims from a Nazi train in World War II. When I arrived he was in a small room with the plaintiff's counsel, George Abdella.[i] The Abdella brothers, George and Ernest, were affectionately called the Thieves of Baghdad for their astounding abilities to extract large sums of money from insurance companies by representing the citizens of Fulton County and elsewhere. When I introduced myself, Judge Walsh inquired if the Allstate Insurance Company had made any offer to resolve the case. I was just there for a preliminary conference and I indicated I had no authority to make an offer. Judge Walsh told me that was fine and asked me to call the company's adjuster. As this was long before the days of mobile phones, I asked where I could use a pay phone. Judge Walsh told me that wasn't necessary as there was a phone right there on the desk I could use. So, even though it was hardly private, I called. As soon as the adjuster got on the line, Judge Walsh asked to speak to him so I gave his Honor the phone. "Mr. Adjuster, I just want you to know that Ainsworth Sullivan sent a really fine lawyer here today on this case. Mr. Friedman is a good young attorney and you should be proud of his representation of your insured. Now, I know that you big city adjusters think that juries don't give out much money here in Johnstown, but I want you to know that if a jury comes in with a verdict of less than your policy limits, I am setting it aside as inadequate. Now, here, I'll put Counselor Friedman on the phone. Nice talking with you." Just as I was contemplating taking up dentistry or some other profession the adjuster said, "Mike, don't worry. I've heard this speech from Judge Walsh several times. Tell him we'll do what we can but we have no money to offer now."

Yeah, I know. Elderly lawyers always say it was more fun in the old days. But y'know, it was.

[i]George Abdella was admitted a few years before Judge Garaufis and he is still practicing in Johnstown, God bless him.

EMPLOYMENT LITIGATION UPDATE

SCOTT PETERSON, ESQ.

EEOC SETTLES SEXUAL ORIENTATION DISCRIMINATION CASE

We previously reported that the EEOC had filed its first sexual orientation discrimination lawsuits. This was significant because the EEOC is interpreting Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to cover sexual orientation, even though it is not specifically listed as a protected status in the statute.

Now, in what is being called a landmark settlement, the EEOC has resolved the first of those cases.

The case, against IFCO Systems, involved a lesbian employee who was harassed by her supervisor and then fired after complaining. In the settlement with the EEOC, the company agreed to pay the employee $182,200, make a $20,000 donation to the Human Rights Campaign's equal employment program, and strengthen its workplace discrimination policies.

The potential implications of this settlement are significant.

AGE DISCRIMINATION

Dunaway v. MPCC Corp., et al
(2nd Cir. 9/27/16)

Plaintiff was an applicant for a senior project manager position with MPCC Corp., a construction general contractor. He was interviewed for the position by the President of the company (also a named Defendant), and Plaintiff alleged that during the interview the President: stated that he was "looking for an employee who would stay for 10 to 15 years"; asked the Plaintiff his age; mentioned that his own elderly father was no longer running the company; and asked the Plaintiff whether he was "capable of withstanding the vigors of the position."

Plaintiff did not receive the position, and thereafter filed an age-discrimination complaint with the NYS Division of Human Rights, which dismissed the case. Plaintiff then commenced an action in Federal Court asserting that the employer violated the Age Discrimination in Employment Act ("ADEA"), which makes it unlawful to fail or refuse to hire an individual because of his or her age.

ADEA cases are analyzed under the familiar McDonnell Douglas "burden shifting" framework, which requires that the Plaintiff initially establish a prima facie case of discrimination by showing that he 1) was within the protected age group; 2) was qualified for the position; 3) experienced an adverse employment action; and 4) that the action occurred under circumstances giving rise to an inference of discrimination. While there was no dispute over the first three elements, Defendant asserted that the Plaintiff could not meet the fourth element.

The Second Circuit acknowledged that the company President "made several references to age, direct and indirect, when he interviewed [Plaintiff]." These references, however, were not illegal, because the ADEA "does not make all discussion of age taboo."

In fact, the Court reasoned, "an employer's concern about the economic consequences of employment decisions, such as the likelihood of an employment candidate's retirement within a short timeframe, does not constitute age discrimination under the ADEA, even though there may be a correlation with age." Moreover, employers do not violate the ADEA where they consider factors that "are empirically intertwined with age…so long as they are motivated by some feature other than the employee's age."

Because the questions were "germane" to the expected length of employment and overall fitness to perform the job, the circumstances did not give rise to an inference that age was a motivating factor in the decision not to hire. Summary judgment affirmed.

THEY'RE NOT LOVIN' IT—MCDONALDS FACES EMPLOYMENT TROUBLES

Call it an unhappy meal for a McDonalds in Missouri, which recently settled a claim by the EEOC that it discriminated against an applicant because of a disability.

According to the EEOC, the McDonald's manager called the applicant in for an interview, but upon learning that the applicant needed an interpreter, because she was deaf, cancelled the interview and did not offer her the job. The company agreed to pay approximately $56,000 to settle the claim.

Note to employers – once the interview request/job offer has been made, be very careful about pulling it back. This sort of behavior is asking for a lawsuit.

To make matters worse, the settlement comes on the heels of a report that McDonald's workers in eight states (including New York) have filed at least 15 complaints of sexual harassment in the last month. These complaints of course have not made their way through the courts, however the claims present an even bigger problem for the company, who has been named by the EEOC as the employer for the purpose of liability.

This may seem like common sense; but the company has generally structured its franchises in such a way as to limit its liability towards employees of individual stores. The current designation by the EEOC is expressly challenging that structure and pointing the finger at the larger corporate entity. Time will tell how the joint employer argument plays out, but we will be watching closely.

CONSUMER BANKRUPTCY

STEPHEN RODRIGUEZ , ESQ.

MEANS TESTING AND MEDIAN INCOME

An individual filing for bankruptcy may be subject to means testing to measure their ability to repay their unsecured debts. Means testing can be avoided if the majority of the debts are non-consumer debts. Consumer debts include home mortgages, so most clients are subject to means testing. However, if the client has substantial IRS debts or substantial business-related debts, the means test may be avoided. The means test is also avoided if household income is below the designated median income level. More on median income below. While there are many factors affecting how and whether a bankruptcy should be filed, the means test is a core factor.

If someone "passes" the means test, they are eligible to file under chapter 7, and eliminate their unsecured debts. If they "fail", then they may only be eligible for chapter 13 with a required monthly payment for up to five years. In a chapter 13, the calculated "surplus" may directly correlate to the amount required to be paid to unsecured creditors. In a few select situations, such as active military duty, or a serious medical condition, a person may still qualify for a chapter 7 despite "failing" the means test. A multi-year chapter 13 bankruptcy has many consequences for a client, so means testing can have a profound impact on a family's options for controlling their debts.

For those who enjoy the reading of pithy statutory provisions, the means test provisions for Chapter 7 cases are in 11 U.S.C. §707.(b)(2), and the provisions for chapter 13 are in 11 U.S.C. §1325(b)(2). If you read these sections, you will see such terms as Current Monthly Income, Projected Monthly Income, Presumption of Abuse, Applicable Monthly Expenses, National Standards, and Local Standards. In this article, I will strive to use common terminology.

In computing the income eligibility issue , the initial and highly important determination is the household size. The number of persons will determine the applicable income level, and will also affect the deductions. The higher the number of persons, the higher the income limit, and the more likely the case will qualify for chapter 7 or at least minimize the amount to be paid in a chapter 13. In today's society, households consist of spouses, partners, children, grandparents, step-kids, girl friends, uncles, boyfriend's kids, informal tenants, etc. Household size is not defined, leading to disagreement amongst the country's bankruptcy judges (and amongst the United States Trustees) on how the number should be determined. The three most common approaches include: 1) number of dependents of the debtor; 2) "heads on beds" being simply the number of people under the roof; and 3) economic unit, which is the approach in the Northern District of New York.

The economic unit calculation can be argued a variety of ways depending on circumstances. Nonetheless, the number of people claimed must reflect the true nature of the living arrangement. Questions to consider are: Are they dependents? Do they share a bank account? Jointly own the house? Who pays for what? How long have they lived together? Do they have children together? Facts and circumstances.

Once a determination is made on household size, the income eligibility issue turns to the math, and there are two parts. Part one determines household income, and is rather simple but technical. Part two is the actual means test, an extended computation of various deductions. For part one (household income), the client's household income is calculated and then compared to the median household income as set by the IRS. As an example, the current median income for a household of two in New York State is $62,451.00. The client's household income includes the amount received in the six month look-back period preceding the bankruptcy filing. Income includes gross payroll, gross pension, profit from self employment, regular contributions from another person, disability benefits, and unemployment, but excludes social security. The six-month amount is doubled to calculate an annual amount. Since many people have income that fluctuates, either through lay-offs, bonuses, over-time, or seasonal work, the particular six-month window used for the calculation can result in substantially different bottom lines. Therefore, timing of a bankruptcy filing is important. But caution must be exercised in timing of the filing, as timing is a factor that would be considered by the United States Trustee in considering whether a bankruptcy case was filed in bad faith. If the client's household income is less than the IRS median, the client would generally be eligible for chapter 7. If the household income exceeds the IRS median, then part two (the means test) allows for a series of deductions to provide a two additional chance at being eligible to file under chapter 7.

The deductions allowed in the means test are primarily standard expenses allowed by the IRS, with some deductions actually reflecting the client's true expenses. It is fair to say that the bankruptcy law favors higher earners who are more likely to have larger mortgages, car loans, retirement plans, and charitable contributions. In any event, there is little leeway in what expenses can be claimed. If the client "passes" this second part of the means test, then they can file under chapter 7. If, however, they "fail" (i.e., show enough of a surplus), then they may only be eligible to file under chapter 13, with a repayment plan generally lasting five years. Just like a carnival game, you get three chances to be eligible for chapter 7: First chance, the calculation shows no surplus (i.e., expenses exceed income); second, the calculation shows that the total amount to be paid to unsecured creditors would be less than $7,700.00; and third, the calculation shows the amount to be paid to unsecured creditors would be less than $12,850.00 and that such amount is less than 25% of the client's non-priority unsecured debts. These last two "chances" provide a very narrow additional basis to qualify for chapter 7.

To further complicate the test, some significant deductions are allowed for a chapter 13, but not for a chapter 7. This can result in the anomaly of a client "failing" the chapter 7 means test, but simultaneously showing no surplus in the chapter 13 means test. In such a situation, the client cannot file under chapter 7, but could file under chapter 13, usually with a minimum payback to unsecured creditors. The most common deductions allowed in 13, but not in 7, are voluntary contributions to retirement, and payments made against a retirement loan. Also, and perhaps most illogically, child support income can usually be omitted in the chapter 13 calculation, but not in a 7. Don't ask me why.

There is some hope for a client in a chapter 13 case who has a one-shot boost of income during the six month look-back, but only when such income is not expected again. The court can look forward, and avoid a pure mechanical approach to the means test. Hamilton v. Lanning, 130 S.Ct. 2464 (2010). In that case, the debtor had received a lump-sum buyout from her employer during the six month look-back. Under a mechanical approach she would have had a monthly bankruptcy payment exceeding $700.00. However, according to her actual anticipated income and expenses, she could only afford about $140.00 per month. The Supreme Court agreed that her actual expected budget could be taken into consideration despite the seemingly rigid statute. Only Scalia dissented. The effect of this case is somewhat limited. First, there was no dispute that the extra income was truly a one-time affair. Second, there also was no dispute over debtor's contention that she could not afford the higher payment. Nonetheless, in a situation where a filing cannot be delayed to avoid capturing extra income in the look-back period, there may be an argument to disregard the formal calculation.

Means testing is often a fiction due to several factors. The test applies a state-wide median income regardless of whether the client lives in Manhattan or the Town of Day (no offense to Day; I truly love the Adirondacks). The income calculation is based on the six months preceding the case filing, with a big assumption that the following six months will reflect the same income. The uniform expense deductions often fail to reflect a family's true expenses. Despite being a fiction, it is rigidly applied.

It is difficult for the attorney in an initial consultation to provided certainty on how a bankruptcy would work for that client. When income is near median, and often when it is significantly over median but the client has significant secured debt and other significant deductions, there is no way to estimate the means test calculations. So, like many aspects of practicing law, the advice is: "it depends."

Bankruptcy cases live and die by the means test.

DEBTORS' PRISON

I am often asked by clients, "Can I go to jail?" The reassuring answer is, "Absolutely not. There are no more debtor's prisons." But, for someone who is dishonest in their petition, jail is an option. In each issue I hope to present a teaching moment showing what not to do when seeking relief under the bankruptcy laws.

This issue's hapless debtor is Abigale Lee Miller, a dance instructor who also appeared in the reality television show Dance Moms. She filed under chapter 11 in 2010, and the case tumbled along for several years. As the story goes, the bankruptcy judge happened to see her on television one night and pondered why her bankruptcy case did not seem to reflect income from her television endeavors. The case unraveled, and she plead guilty to fraud and other charges in June of this year. Sentencing was recently delayed. Lesson: If your name is on television, assume the whole world will see it. Same is true for Facebook. And Twitter. Email. Text message.

INSIGHT INTO IMMIGRATION

IMMIGRATION NEWS FROM MEYERS & MEYERS, LLP

AND THE 2016 ENDORSEMENT FOR PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES GOES TO...

To say that this has been an interesting presidential election season is an understatement, at best. We've never seen anything like it before (and I personally hope we never see anything like it ever again). The candidates obviously present different approaches to very important national issues, and on the issue of immigration, it's no different.

As of this writing, we've been through two presidential debates, and surprisingly, the issue of immigration has not come up as a topic of discussion by the debate moderators. Apparently that's about to change with the third and final debate. Chris Wallace, the moderator of the third 2016 presidential debate, has selected the topics for that debate, and one of the topics is immigration. So, where do the candidates stand?

According to Donald Trump's campaign website, he's got a ten point plan "to put America first" with respect to immigration. It includes the following:

1. Begin working on an impenetrable physical wall on the southern border, on day one (and Mexico will pay for the wall).
2. End catch-and-release. Under a Trump administration, anyone who illegally crosses the border will be detained until they are removed out of our country.
3. Move criminal aliens out day one, in joint operations with local, state, and federal law enforcement. A Trump administration will terminate the Obama administration's deadly, non-enforcement policies that allow thousands of criminal aliens to freely roam our streets.
4. End sanctuary cities.
5. Immediately terminate President Obama's two illegal executive amnesties. All immigration laws will be enforced, and how that's done includes tripling the number of ICE agents. Anyone who enters the U.S. illegally is subject to deportation.
6. Suspend the issuance of visas to any place where adequate screening cannot occur, until proven and effective vetting mechanisms can be put into place.
7. Ensure that other countries take their people back when we order them deported.
8. Ensure that a biometric entry-exit visa tracking system is fully implemented at all land, air, and sea ports.
9. Turn off the jobs and benefits magnet.
10. Reform legal immigration to serve the best interests of America and its workers, keeping immigration levels within historic norms.

Our country's leaders should be focused on promoting justice, and to advocate for and ultimately enact fair and reasonable immigration laws. On the campaign trail, and implicitly through his ten point plan above, Donald Trump presents a dark portrayal of immigrants as criminals and a drain on our society and economy. His views show a complete disregard for fundamental rights of due process that our guaranteed by our Constitution, and frankly a complete and utter failure to appreciate the valuable and important contributions that immigrants make in every sector of our economy and in our communities.

Hilary Clinton, on the other hand, presents a very different approach. According to her campaign website, she will:

1. Introduce comprehensive immigration reform with a pathway to full and equal citizenship within her first 100 days in office;
2. End the three- and 10-year bars;
3. Defend President Obama's executive actions, known as DACA and DAPA, against partisan attacks;
4. Do everything possible under the law to protect families;
5. If Congress keeps failing to act on comprehensive immigration reform, Ms. Clinton will enact a simple system for those with sympathetic cases, such as parents of DREAMers, those with a history of service and contribution to their communities, or those who experience extreme labor violations, to make their case and be eligible for deferred action;
6. Enforce immigration laws humanely;
7. End family detention and close private immigration detention centers;
8. Expand access to affordable health care to all families;
9. Promote naturalization; and
10. Support immigrant integration.

Although Ms. Clinton was President Obama's Secretary of State, and presumably a supporter of most of President Obama's positions on important national issues, she has distanced herself (somewhat anyway) on the issue of immigration. That is, she has indicated that President Obama has been too hard on undocumented immigrants during his administration, and that she would take a more humane approach if she were elected president, avoiding deporting people and breaking up families over small crimes (among many other things).

When I have discussions with people about who they plan on voting for president, it's interesting the analysis many go through in order to rationalize their position. Frankly, I'm no different on some level. But when I consider the issue of immigration, and area of law for which I have great passion, I don't think there's even a choice. Yes, we can all agree that our immigration system is broken, and yes, we can probably all agree that we need to better secure our borders. But that does not mean we need to focus on enforcement before we consider any other aspects of immigration reform. We need to do it comprehensively, and we need to do it humanely. There's only one candidate that advocating for that approach, and that's who I am voting for.

MATRIMONIAL AND FAMILY LAW UPDATE

LAURA M. HOFFMAN, ESQ.

CUSTODY/VISITATION—OVERRULE PRIOR PRECEDENT—STANDING—DEFINITION OF "PARENT"—SAME-SEX COUPLES—STARE DECISIS

Brooke S.B. v. Elizabeth A.C.C., 28 N.Y.3d 1 (August 30, 2016): The New York State Court of Appeals recently expanded the definition "parent" for purposes of Domestic Relations Law ("DRL") §70. The Court held that, with respect to an unmarried couple, if a partner establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the parties agreed to conceive a child and raise it together, then the non-biological, non-adoptive partner has standing to seek custody and visitation. This holding expressly over-rules its prior precedent in Alison D. v. Virginia M., 77 N.Y.2d 651 (1991), where it held that the word "parent" in Domestic Relations Law §70 should be interpreted to preclude standing for a de facto parent who, under a theory of equitable estoppel, might otherwise be recognized as the child's parent for visitation purposes (citation omitted). Specifically, we held that "a biological stranger to a child who is properly in the custody of his biological mother" has no "standing to seek visitation with the child under Domestic Relations Law §70" (citation omitted).

Thus, under Alison D., a partner without a biological or adoptive relation to a child was not that child's "parent" for purposes of standing to seek custody or visitation under DRL §70 notwithstanding their "established relationship with the child" (77 N.Y.2d at 655).

The Court acknowledged that under stare decisis, "a court's decision on an issue of law should generally bind the court in future cases that present the same issue". However, it noted, "we may overrule a prior decision if an extraordinary combination of factors undermines the reasoning and practical viability of our prior decision". Brooke S.B., at 9. The Court determined it had such extraordinary circumstances, noting there was a disparity "in the support and custody contexts" "wherein a non-biological, non-adoptive 'parent' may be estopped from disclaiming parentage and made to pay child support in a filiation proceeding (citation omitted), yet denied standing to seek custody or visitation". Id. at 10. Significantly, the Court stated that Alison D.'s "foundational premise of heterosexual parenting and non-recognition of same-sex couples is unsustainable," in light of the enactment of same-sex marriage in New York State and the United States Supreme Court's holding in Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (2015), "which noted that the right to marry provides benefits not only for same-sex couples, but also the children being raised by those couples." Id.

Additionally, current law emphasized biology, making it impossible for both former partners of a same-sex couple to have standing, without marriage or adoption, which is not the case where both partners in a heterosexual relationship are biologically related to the child. The Court further pointed to the stigma suffered by children raised by same-sex couples, and the negative impact on children who suffer as a result of "separation from a primary attachment figure".

The Court declined to adopt a single test to determine standing for all non-biological, non-adoptive, unmarried "parents" raising children. Rather, the Court held that in cases "where a petitioner proves by clear and convincing evidence that he or she has agreed with the biological parent of the child to conceive and raise a child as co-parents, the petitioner has presented sufficient evidence to achieve standing to seek custody and visitation of the child". The Court stressed that its holding in Brooke S.B., only addresses standing to petition; the ultimate determination of whether this relief will be granted rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, based upon the best interests of the child. Brooke S.B., at 11.

CUSTODY—DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY TO STRUCTURE VISITATION

Matter of Christine TT. v. Dino UU, 2016 N.Y. Slip Op. 06910 (3rd Dept. October 20, 2016): Mother, who had supervised visitation of the parties' daughter due to alcoholism, sought modification of custody after completion substance abuse treatment programs. Following a fact finding hearing, the trial court directed the father to enroll the child in counseling "with the goal of reunification with [the mother]," and further directed the child to attend "at least two joint sessions with [the mother] and the counselor." Further counseling would be at the father's discretion. The court then authorized visitation as the parties mutually agreed, taking into account the advice of the counselor. Failing an agreement, either party could petition the court "for the limited purpose of determining an appropriate visitation schedule". On appeal, the Third Department determined that Family Court improperly delegated its authority to structure visitation noting there was a "sound and substantial basis in this record for Family Court's decision to modify the prior visitation order by limiting the mother's visitation to a counseling format - - which the mother acknowledged was the best she could hope for given her strained relationship with the child. . . That said, by effectively making further visitation contingent on the success of counseling and the father's approval, Family Court improperly delegated its authority to structure a visitation schedule." The case was remitted to Family Court for a determination as to whether a resumption of visitation would be in the child's best interests, and if so, under what circumstances.

CUSTODY—ALIENATION—DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY—ATTORNEY FOR THE CHILD'S POSITION ADVERSE TO CHILD'S WISHES

Matter of Zakariah SS. v. Tara TT., 2016 N.Y. Slip Op. 06923 (3rd Dept. October 20, 2016): Mother and father file cross-petitions in Family Court seeking sole legal and physical custody of their ten (10) year old daughter. In support of their respective positions, the mother alleges severe physical abuse of the child by the father. In turn, the father alleges the mother has alienated the child from him and failed to foster a relationship between them. The court granted the father's petition for sole legal and physical custody and denied the mother's petition. In making its determination, Family Court relied heavily on the testimony of the psychologist who had performed a forensic custody evaluation. The psychologist concluded there was "no credible evidence of abuse" by the father, but there was evidence of "coaching, coercion and brainwashing" of the child by the mother. The Third Department found a sound and substantial basis in the record to support the conclusion that awarding the father sole custody was in the child's best interests and reiterated that "a parent's intentional efforts to alienate a child from another parent is so inimical to a child's interests as to raise a strong probability that the offending parent is unfit to be a custodial parent". However, it was error for the Family Court to delegate the determination of the mother's visitation to the child's counselor as the court "cannot delegate its authority to determine visitation to a mental health professional." The Appellate Court further found "no fault in the attorney for the child's decision to advocate for a position contrary to the child's wishes, of which Family Court was aware, given that such wishes were 'likely to result in a substantial risk of imminent, serious harm to [her]'".
